

www.breastcancerfund.org

Dear Lynn,

A few weeks ago we told Revlon to get toxic chemicals linked to cancer out of its products. The company responded by threatening us with legal action. But, Revlon's bullying has only made us stronger—and now 50,000 people (and growing) have urged the cosmetics giant to put women's health first.

Help us keep the heat on Revlon. TAKE ACTION by posting this graphic on Revlon's Facebook page and sending the company a public message on Twitter.

Leslie Vanoni, a breast cancer survivor and mom of two teenage daughters, has had enough with Revlon. She says, "Revlon claims to care about women with breast cancer, but it's just hot air. If they really cared, they would take cancer-causing chemicals out of our makeup. I have enough to worry about as a mom. I shouldn't have to worry about whether or not my daughters' mascara will increase their risks for breast cancer."

Do you stand with Leslie and other cancer survivors? Tell Revlon you want the company to take our health seriously!

Share on Facebook, Twitter and forward this email to spread the word.

50K of us (and growing) are asking:
Revlon, if you care about women, when will you get toxic chemicals linked to cancer out of our makeup?

— Leslie Vanoni, breast cancer survivor and concerned mom

DOES
REVLON?
CARE ?

Learn more:
safecosmetics.org/revlon

Thank you for all that you do,

Your friends at the Breast Cancer Fund

P.S. We're standing up to a corporate behemoth, and we need your support. Large or small, your contribution will help us get Revlon to clean up its act. Please donate today.

Connect with the Breast Cancer Fund for tips, action alerts, news and more:

